Have you ever wondered where tulips came from and how they made their way to the shores of Lake Michigan? Surprisingly, the Netherlands was not the first place to grow its trademark flower. As early as 1,000 AD, the Turks were cultivating tulips; their source was the mountainous region of central Asia that borders Russia and China. Many believe the flower was named for its resemblance to turbans worn in the Middle East – “turban,” in Latin, becomes “tulipa.”

Dutch tulip history began in 1593 when botanist Carolus Clusius began cultivating tulips in the Netherlands. At first, the tulip was a rarity only the very wealthy could afford. By 1624, the price of one Rembrandt-type tulip reached the equivalent of $1,500. The time between 1634 and 1637, commonly known as “Tulipmania,” is often compared to the Stock Market surge of the 1920s. In 1637, tulip trading crashed, leaving many of the rich instantly impoverished. However, over the following decades, the Dutch maintained a commercial devotion to the tulip.

Today the Netherlands produces three billion tulip bulbs a year. They export two billion, with the U.S. being the top importer.

The first tulip bulbs came to Holland, MI with one of the waves of settlers after Albertus VanRaalte founded the town in 1847. The bulbs were planted and thrived in the area’s sandy loam soil. In 1927, Lida Rodgers, a high school biology teacher, suggested that the city plant tulips along the streets and in city parks as a beautification effort. In 1928, following Rodgers’ recommendation, the city purchased 100,000 bulbs; Holland held its first tulip festival in the spring of 1929!
Each September close to 1,000,000 tulip bulbs arrive in Holland! After being inspected, the “planting of the bulbs” begins in early October and runs through mid-November. (Over 120 varieties of tulips are planted.)

200,000 bulbs are planted by hand, using bulb planters that punch a hole in the soil. The bulb is then dropped in and covered by raking the soil back over the bulb. The “tulip lanes” along the city streets are planted differently. Using a special machine developed by Holland Transplanter, a local company, a trench is dug along the curb’s edge, with the bulbs being hand-thrown into the trench. A machine then covers the bulbs with soil. The fields at both Windmill Island Gardens and Window on the Waterfront Park are planted with a six row modified planter. Planting 92,000 bulbs at both locations takes about two-and-a-half days. Another 30,000 bulbs are planted at Window on the Waterfront by volunteers during “tulip bulb planting day.” The Parks Department and staff at Windmill Island Gardens also plant over 400,000 tulip bulbs along the city streets and in the parks.

When you combine the City Parks Department plantings, Windmill Island Gardens plantings, and the area tulip farm plantings, along with local businesses and residents planting their own bulbs, Holland bursts into bloom with over 5,000,000 tulips each spring!

Wist u dat? (DID YOU KNOW?)

Many visitors want to take tulip bulbs home to plant in their own gardens. While bulbs are not available in the spring, they can be ordered for fall delivery. Look for the 🌼🌼🌼 to see where bulbs can be ordered.
TULIP (TYPES)

SINGLE LATE
The ‘Single’ classification comes from the unique cup-shaped six-petal flower. Late spring bloomers have an average height of 18 to 30 inches (45-75 cm). Often called “cottage tulips” because of their perfect height to plant along traditional white cottage fencing, you’ll see many of these tulips throughout the U.S. and Europe. (This bloom is what most people think a tulip looks like!)

TRIUMPH
The Triumph tulips, (often called mid-season tulips) are slightly smaller with their single cup-shaped flowers up to 2.5 inches (6 cm) wide. They make good cut flowers and work well for forcing to bloom indoors. The cover photo on the Holland Visitors Guide is a Triumph tulip.

DARWIN HYBRID
Darwin Hybrid tulips (an early season bloom) are known for their size! Blossoms are an almost perfect pyramid shape when closed, but can measure as much as 6 inches (15 cm) in diameter when fully open. Because of their long stems, lovely pyramid shape, and brilliant colors, Darwin Hybrids are often considered the very best type of tulip to raise for cut flowers.

DOUBLE (EARLY AND LATE)
The blossoms of the Double tulip have so many petals they are nicknamed Peony Tulips. They don’t have a large selection of colors like other types, but are very long lasting. On sunny days, when they are completely open, the blossoms can be as wide as 4 inches in diameter.

MULTI-FLOWERING
These bouquet-flowering tulips produce at least four full-sized flowers per stem. Technically not a class of tulips unto themselves, but part of the single late group, they make for a full garden display as well as lush cut flower arrangements.

FRINGED
Fringed tulips have petals topped with fringes that look like the frayed edge of a piece of satin. Although they tend to be shorter tulips, the blooms are quite long-lasting.

LILY FLOWERING
The late flowering Lily tulips have slender flowers often sporting pointed, recurving petals which are reflexed (bent back) and resemble a lily or urn. From above, the open flower can look like a six-pointed star. In Turkey, this is the tulip of choice.

PARROT
Parrot tulips (mid-season) are flamboyant tulips with curly, twisted, and fringed petals that resemble the colorful feathers of the tropical bird of the same name. However, their beak-shape buds are what earned them their moniker. Nearly all varieties of parrot tulips are vibrantly multi-colored.

VIRIDIFLORA
The term Viridiflora is derived from two Latin words: viridis meaning green and flos meaning flower. All Viridiflora tulips have a streak of green somewhere on each petal. This contrasts dramatically with the basic flower color (white, pink, gold, etc.). In addition to this spectacular color contrast, Viridiflora tulips are also known for their exceptionally long-flowering capability.

New tulip bulbs are planted downtown and in city parks every year. After the tulips have bloomed and turned brown, residents and visitors are invited to Holland’s annual Tulip Dig, where, for $10, one can dig up enough bulbs to fill a five gallon bucket. This one day event is a fundraiser for Holland in Bloom, a city initiative to promote beautification, environmental awareness, and heritage preservation in our community. www.hollandinbloom.com

We are “painting the town orange” in celebration of the Tulip Time Festival’s 90th anniversary! You will see orange tulips of different varieties in our local parks and throughout the town. Look for the iconic tulip-shaped beds ( رغم) filled with the Cadans tulip, the official 90th Tulip Time tulip! 22,000 Cadans tulips were planted throughout Holland. The purple tulip that compliments the Cadans is called Saigon. The beds were created to showcase the Cadans and are varying sizes. The raised bed in Centennial Park pays tribute to the 90th Anniversary and is filled with over 6,000 tulips. Other areas that have “tulip” beds planted with Cadans include: various beds in Downtown Holland, Holland High School Entrance, the Hope College Campus (12th & College) and surrounding Holland Welkom signs.
The Klompen Garden is a public art project celebrating the 90th Tulip Time Festival. It showcases 45 pairs of artfully designed large ‘wooden shoes’ installed in city parks and tulip beds in the downtown area. Local artists were invited to submit a design concept and sketch for this one-of-a-kind art project. Tulip Time supplied each selected artist or group of collaborating artists with a large pair (34”L x 12”W x 12”H) of ‘wooden shoes’, to bring their concept to life. Look for signage in the parks as well as this icon (ין) in this brochure. A juror vote and public vote will determine the favorite klompen. Participate in the public vote on the Tulip Time Festival’s Facebook Page or visit www.hollandsentinel.com/contests May 1 – 11! (The top three pair of klompen projects will be announced Sunday, May 12 at 10am on Facebook!) Please do not sit, stand, or stomp in the Klompen.

For additional information on this celebratory art project, visit www.tulip-time.com/klompen-garden.com

Wist u dat?

Window on the Waterfront is a 30-acre park that includes prairie areas, walking/biking paths, scenic overlooks of the Macatawa Marsh and DeZwaan Windmill. Riverview Park also hosts a vintage baseball game during Tulip Time!

After the tulip season has ended, the City Parks Department plants over 60,000 annuals in the downtown area and adjoining parks.

In addition to the plantings shown, bulbs that have been preserved in cold storage are also planted in over 200 planters, pots and containers. They are displayed throughout Windmill Island Gardens during the festival.
Three types of species of tulip are planted at Windmill Island Gardens: Lady Jane, Tubergen’s Gem, and Orphanida Flava. Species tulips are much smaller than the hybrids we know as tulips today, but they are the originals from which all the big beauties are descended. And because they are species, not hybrids, they are long-lived when just left in place.
Dedicated foot paths are located throughout the fields. Please help us preserve the tulips by using these paths.

In 2019, Windmill Island Gardens is celebrating the theme ‘Catch the Wind!’ As part of the celebration the Island will host a number of wind-driven sculptures from artist Peter Griz. These kinetic sculptures will be enhanced by beautiful flowers that also move in the wind. (Windmill Island Gardens is open through mid-October.)
